Discovering meaningful connections through support groups

While the seasons change, our commitment to providing the right support does not. Our support groups, based on information sharing and mutual aid, are designed with the belief that people in similar circumstances can uniquely support one another through the dementia journey.

Dementia – whether you’re living with it or caring for someone who is – can be very lonely, as friends and family may not fully grasp your experience. Our support groups create a space where you can connect with others who genuinely understand, ensuring that no one has to navigate this journey alone. These groups provide a sense of belonging and genuine understanding, with friendships that often extend beyond the group and become essential lifelines.

Our support groups are available in person and online. To learn more, visit:

Reach out to candidates and speak up this election

As the provincial election approaches on October 19, we encourage you to advocate for a comprehensive dementia strategy by engaging with candidates in your community.

We’re calling on candidates to commit to breaking down the stigma associated with dementia, improving the diagnosis process and ensuring timely access to necessary support. To help you raise your voice, we’ve created simple tools and resources on our website to help you connect with your local candidates to share your stories and help change changing perceptions about the disease. You can also find a recording of a recent webinar we hosted with former B.C. Minister of Health Terry Lake and our lived experience partners directly affected by the disease to help people become effective advocates.

Join us in making dementia a priority this election. To learn more, visit:
